DO MOVIE ACTRESSES REALLY SHED TEARS?

HERE'S SOME EXPERT OPINION ON A SUBJECT DEAR TO THE HEART OF EVERY FAN OF THE MOVIE MAKING FILMS.

When a movie actress sheds a tear, it is a common sight. But is it real? Or is it just a trick of the trade? An expert on the subject of movie acting, the famous actress, Mary Allen, has shed some light on the subject. She says that she has shed many tears, but they are not real. She says that she has learned to control her emotions and to shed tears when she needs to. She says that she has learned to shed tears when she is sad, but she has learned to control her emotions when she is happy.

The next great Esenay—Chaplin comedy is entitled "The Bank." There is more riotous fun packed into this two-reel comedy than any other photoplay of like length. The world's great comedian, Charles Chaplin, has outdone himself in this new production. While all his other comedies are funny, this one is a scream. It abounds in real humor and comic situations, with Chaplin at his best in his inimitable antics. Not that Chaplin does not prepare for his comedies. He studies his character for days and even months to learn just what they do and how they act under given circumstances. But when he comes to the taking of the scene, he lets this knowledge trickle out as the action calls for so that nothing is forced. The action hits the bull's eye for realism, which Chaplin maintains is necessary to real humor. A slight exaggeration, perhaps, but the great comedian finds that to be funny the action must appeal to the spectator as real.

While full of rollicking fun, this comedy is clean and wholesome and a comedy that is enjoyed by men, women and children alike. You will be able to see this screaming comedy at the Lyric Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. Open 10 a. m.

SOME BIG BATTLE BLUNDERS.

Errors That Decided the Fate of Big Armies.

"Considerable delay occurred after the capture of the Noire Chapelle position. The infantry had been greatly disorganized. The delay would not have occurred if the 'clearly expressed order of Sir Douglas Haig had been more carefully observed.' Thus Sir John French, in one of his latest dispatches. Who blundered? Not until the full story of the war comes to be written will the public know. Military law and discipline, however, admit of no mistake, and as a rule, punishment is swift and drastic when blunders have been made on the battlefield. Sometimes, as in the case of General Von Emmich, the leader of the German army, who failed to capture Liege in the required time, and who shot himself, and a certain Russian commanding general, who also committed suicide rather than surrender after committing a blunder, distinguished soldiers take the law into their own hands. It is a curious fact, however, that while Field Marshal Haig was sentenced to death by a French court-martial for having surrendered Metz to the Germans in 1870, the sentence being commuted afterwards to life-long imprisonment, Marshal MacMahon, who suffered many defeats at the hands of the Germans and was captured by them, was ultimately elected to the presidency of France and, on his death, was mourned by the whole nation. In the late Boer war, probably the two most lamentable blunders are linked with the names of Magerfontein and Spion Kop. It was at the former place that Lord Methuen's attack on the Boer lines was repulsed with considerable loss, in spite of the great courage shown by the Black Watch, the Gordons, Yorks and artillery under a terrific fire, while at Spion Kop the British force under Ruler were compelled to evacuate the position gained under a raking shell fire, our casualties amounting to 1,500, as compared with less than 100 of the Boers.

Englishmen will not readily forget the tragedy of Mahaba Hill of 1881, when Sir George Colley led an attack on the Boer position with 600 men. The British force being routed and Sir George falling with his face to the enemy. The Boers, it is said, only lost one man. That was a terrible tragedy, too, at Mafeking, Afghanistan, when, the year before at Mafeking, General Buller was miscalculated the power of Ayoub Khan, who had proclaimed a holy war against British arms with about 20,000 men. After four hours' terrific fighting General Buller was compelled to retreat with terrible losses, the British commanders being afterwards censured. It was to avenge this defeat that Lord Roberts made his historic march from Kabul to Kandahar, totally routing Ayoub Khan, and reduced to submission the refractory Afghan troops, finally evacuating Afghanistan in 1881.—The Bilt.

There is a Down East dialogue, which I have often thought might furnish the motif for a tragedy under the pen of Mary E. Wilkins Freeman. It runs like this: "Where's he goin', Si?" "Goin' down to Portland to get drunk. And, gosh, how I dew dread it!"—New York Times.

NOT A DANIEL

Two men were regarding a ferocious poster advertising one of Selig's jungle films. Said one: "Well, I'm glad I won't be in Chicago for several months." "Why?" asked the other. The first pointed in silence to a hard announcement beneath the lions, tigers, jaguars and hippopotami. It read: "To be released next week."—From September Photoplay Magazine.
